die welt ändert sich heutzutage schneller als je zuvor permanente veränderung wird mittlerweile nicht mehr als temporäres phänomen sondern als beständige tatsache verstanden dank globalisierung und technologischer entwicklung ergeben sich ständig neue verknüpfungen und vernetzungen zwischen unterschiedlichen objekten orten und sachverhalten somit wird die menschliche umwelt im zeitalter der globalisierung immer komplexer und unübersichtlicher zu der ausgeprägten dynamik kommt die erhöhte komplexität der bestände in vielen bereichen die bedeutung von gesamtzusammenhängen in der finanzindustrie wurde im februar 2009 durch die studie the corporate governance lessons from the financial crisis einmal mehr bestätigt die konzentration der studie auf einzelne mathematische und technische kennzahlen führte jedoch dazu dass die gesamtzusammenhänge im risikomanagement außer acht gelassen wurden system dynamics basiert auf erkenntnissen der kybernetik sowie der systemtheorie und verwendet neben dem systemischen denken eine simulation zur analyse des verhaltens komplexer systeme im zeitverlauf damit erfüllt ein solcher ansatz alle anforderungen an methoden der analyse von komplexen dynamischen systemen es geht im vorliegenden buch weniger darum die phänomene des wandels denen wir ausgesetzt sind nur zu interpretieren sondern zu lernen mit veränderungen umzugehen sich von ihnen leiten zu lassen und sie zu meistern

der begriff der banksteuerung oder der gesamtbanksteuerung lehnt sich stark an den begriff der unternehmensführung an auch banken oder finanzdienstleister die einer aufsicht der bundeanstalt für finanzdienstleistungsaufsicht bafin unterliegen sind unternehmen als solche haben sie eine strategie die sie unter berücksichtigung der für sie geltenden regelungen und vorschriften umsetzen möchten die regulatorischen anforderungen an banken und finanzdienstleister weichen allerdings stark von vorgaben anderer branchen ab insbesondere wurden die quantitativen wie auch die qualitativen anforderungen nach der bankenkrise der nullerjahre weiter erhöht alleine schon diese vorgaben machen die banksteuerung zu einem immer wieder neuen und spannenden aufgabengebiet bei dem sich die rahmenbedingungen und die zielrichtungen laufend ändern dabei muss eine bank als unternehmen versuchen für ihre zielrichtung und ihre möglichkeiten die

optimale strategie zu finden und diese auch entsprechend umzusetzen je nach definition ist die banksteuerung eher angelehnt an das prinzip der unternehmenssteuerung was banken und institute damit mit anderen unternehmen gleichsetzt die gesamtbanksteuerung hingegen die betrachtung und optimierung der spezifischen geschäfte des finanzbereichs in einem unternehmen die neue banksteuerung hingegen ist ein holistischer ansatz zur optimierung der erfüllung der anforderungen an eine bank oder einen finanzdienstleister unter berücksichtigung der weiteren entwicklung in deren umwelt dieses buch zeigt die gründe auf wieso es für banken in der heutigen technisierten arbeitsteiligen welt schwierig ist strategien zu finden und umzusetzen ich werde aber auch eine mögliche vorgehensweise vorstellen die auf neue technische möglichkeiten im markt abstellt zwar kann es keine standardisierte lösung für alle branchenteilnehmer geben jedoch können an vielen stellen die gleichen unzulänglichkeiten auftreten die heutige unternehmenssteuerung braucht ein tiefes verständnis für die produkte die prozesse und die risiken darf allerdings den menschlichen faktor nie außer acht lassen ziel dieses buches ist es für mehr verständnis zu sorgen einen holistischen ansatz vorzustellen und aufzuzeigen wo schwachstellen in der aktuellen vorgehensweise sind oder waren die bankenkrise nach 2007 hat viele feste säulen in der methodik der regulatorik und im selbstverständnis der banken für immer verändert banksteuerung ist heute sehr viel stärker durch vorgaben und limitierungen eingeschränkt sie ist zudem internationaler geworden weil weltweit in den relevanten märkten viele neue regelungen gelten alle anforderungen wollen berücksichtigt werden und diese ändern sich immer weiter das heißt dass auch in diesem buch manche aspekte nicht mehr aktuell sein werden der grundlegende kreislauf aber die möglichkeiten darin und die mitspieler am markt werden sich in den nächsten jahren weniger verändern als man annehmen könnte wenn man die presse verfolgt mehrjahrespläne von banken sollten das berücksichtigen indem sie das bereits denkbare aufgreifen seine direkte oder indirekte relevanz für das eigene tun bewerten um es dann mit zu berücksichtigen oder zu verwerfen

Blood Serum vs. Plasma: Understanding the Differences

Blood, the lifeblood of our bodies, is a complex fluid carrying essential components for various bodily functions. Two key components of blood often cause confusion: serum and plasma. While both are liquid parts of blood after the cellular components are removed, they differ significantly in their composition and applications. This article will clarify the distinctions between blood serum and plasma, highlighting their unique properties and uses.

1. What is Blood Plasma?

Plasma constitutes the largest component of blood, making up approximately 55% of its total volume. It's a straw-colored, viscous liquid that carries various essential substances throughout the body. Think of plasma as the "solvent" in which all other blood components are suspended. Its primary function is transportation: it carries nutrients (glucose, amino acids, fatty acids), hormones, proteins (albumin, antibodies), waste products (urea, creatinine), electrolytes (sodium, potassium, chloride), and gases (oxygen, carbon dioxide). Plasma is essentially the liquid portion of blood before clotting factors are removed. It's a complex mixture, with approximately 92% water and the remaining 8% consisting of the aforementioned dissolved substances and proteins.

2. The Role of Clotting Factors in Distinguishing Serum and Plasma

The key difference between plasma and serum lies in the presence of clotting factors, specifically fibrinogen. Fibrinogen is a crucial protein involved in blood clotting. When blood is allowed to clot naturally, fibrinogen is consumed in the formation of a fibrin mesh, the structural basis of the clot. This process separates the cellular components (red blood cells, white blood cells, platelets) from the remaining liquid portion.

3. What is Blood Serum?

Blood serum is the pale yellow liquid that remains after blood has clotted and the clotting factors, including fibrinogen, have been removed. Essentially, serum is plasma minus the clotting factors. Although it lacks fibrinogen, serum still contains many of the other vital components found in plasma, such as antibodies, hormones, and electrolytes. This is why serum is often used in diagnostic testing for various conditions and diseases.

4. Applications of Plasma and Serum

Both plasma and serum have valuable applications in medicine and research. Plasma, due to its complete protein profile, is frequently used in transfusions to treat trauma victims and patients with severe blood loss. It's also a crucial component of various therapies, particularly those requiring the delivery of clotting factors (e.g., treating hemophilia). The rich cocktail of proteins and other molecules in plasma makes it a vital component in many medical procedures. Serum, on the other hand, is extensively utilized in diagnostic testing. Because it's free of clotting factors, it doesn't interfere with many tests, making it ideal for analyzing blood chemistry, measuring antibody levels (immunoglobulins) to assess immunity, and detecting specific substances indicative of disease (like enzymes or hormones). For example, serum is used in blood tests to detect the presence of antibodies against viral infections or to check cholesterol levels. Furthermore, serum is used in various research applications, such as studying antibodies and developing vaccines.

5. Scenarios Illustrating the Differences

Imagine a scenario where a patient suffers from a significant blood loss. In this case, plasma transfusion would be essential as it provides the immediate replacement of fluids and clotting factors, helping to restore blood volume and promote coagulation. However, if a doctor needs to assess the patient's antibody levels to understand their immune response to a particular infection, serum would be the preferred sample as it doesn't contain the proteins that could interfere with antibody detection. This illustrates how the distinct composition of plasma and serum dictates their respective uses in medical practice.

Summary

Plasma and serum are both vital components of blood, differing primarily in the presence or absence of clotting factors. Plasma, the liquid portion of blood before clotting, contains fibrinogen and other clotting factors along with numerous other proteins, nutrients, and electrolytes. Serum, obtained after blood clotting, lacks fibrinogen and clotting factors, making it ideal for various diagnostic tests. Both plasma and serum hold critical roles in medicine and research, with plasma essential for fluid replacement and clotting factor provision, and serum critical for various diagnostic assessments and research applications. Understanding these distinctions is crucial for professionals in healthcare and biological sciences.

Frequently Asked Questions (FAQs)

1. Can serum be used for transfusions? No, serum is unsuitable for transfusions because it lacks clotting factors crucial for blood coagulation. Plasma is the appropriate blood component for transfusions in cases of significant blood loss. 2. Which is better for testing, serum or plasma? The choice between serum and plasma depends on the specific test. Serum is often preferred for immunological assays and many biochemical tests as it avoids interference from clotting factors. However, some tests require plasma due to its complete protein profile. 3. How is serum obtained? Serum is obtained by allowing blood to clot naturally and then centrifuging it to separate the clot from the liquid serum. 4. What are the major proteins present in plasma? Major plasma proteins include albumin (maintaining osmotic pressure), globulins (involved in immunity and transport), and fibrinogen (essential for blood clotting). 5. Can plasma be used for any diagnostic test? While plasma can be used for many diagnostic tests, it is not always ideal. The presence of clotting factors can sometimes interfere with certain assays, necessitating the use of serum. The specific requirements of each test should always be considered.
