the end is near or the beginning the united states is falling down drunk broke we are bankrupt we were of course morally bankrupt first our moral bankruptcy led to our financial bankruptcy what happens if when the financial system implodes this huge and out of control baby killing wedding bombing leviathan may implode as well that sounds like it might be dangerous because it is but reality exists thats my theory anyway and im sticking to it no evil empire goes on forever ask assyria nazi germany and the soviet union god is sovereign and he will strongly support those whose heart is completely his 2 chronicles 16 9 maybe the end of the united states can be a turning point for enormous good in world history but we all christians and non christians need to think about this a lot more hence getting ready for secession by carl wells

the open access publication of this book has been published with the support of the swiss national science foundation are countries capable of reducing economic inequality under conditions of contemporary globalisation without cooperating and coordinating with other countries while states are far from powerless to effect distributional change within their own sovereign space taking a common concern approach to economic inequality makes the case that cooperation and coordination is indeed necessary especially in relation to corporate taxation it accordingly contemplates the utility of a transnational taxation system that is embedded in cooperative sovereignty through the recognition of rising economic inequality and its deleterious effects including how increasingly unequal distributions within countries make transnational cooperation and coordination efforts less likely as a common concern of humankind wisdom consciousness and the future collected essays thomas lombardo ph d center for future consciousness wisdom consciousness and the future is a profound deeply important and timely book that concerned people and change agents everywhere will want to read copthorne macdonald the wisdom page as a college professor and teacher of psychology philosophy and the future tom lombardos mind has been drawn toward such questions as how will the human mind evolve in the future in fact how should the human mind evolve and improve itself what might be the standards and ideals that guide this evolution and what role does ethical development or evolution play in this process the twenty previously published articles collected together in wisdom consciousness and the future chronicle the development of dr lombardos ideas on these related questions and topics and together constitute a theoretical perspective on the nature of the human mind on how to best educate and evolve the human mind in the future and how to integrate into this vision the central importance of both future consciousness as a key dimension of human consciousness and ethical character virtues true to its title three key themes emerge in this collection wisdom consciousness and the future and all three concepts tie into the authors main contribution to the field of futures studies future consciousness numerous essays for example evolving future consciousness through the pursuit of virtue and the evolution and psychology of future consciousness address the nature of future consciousness a term dr lombardo defines as the complex set of mental capacities all humans possess for imagining conceptualizing and approaching the future aside from describing the psychological make up of future consciousness which includes emotional motivational cognitive and personal dimensions the author also explains in numerous essays such as developing constructive and creative attitudes about the future how to proactively enhance ones future consciousness other essays deal directly with consciousness and the human mind in the broadest sense as in the future evolution of the ecology of mind and connect this general area of inquiry with the futurist question of how consciousness and mind might evolve in the future dr lombardo proposes that the progressive emergence of cosmic consciousness is the central evolutionary trajectory of the human mind hence this book contains essays on both consciousness of the future and consciousness in the future while the discussion of consciousness and the future fascinates in its own right dr lombardo is a holistic and deep thinker who searches for connections among myriad philosophical topics a number of essays address the question of ethics and virtue and how such concepts connect with both future consciousness and the evolution of consciousness in the future he then expands on this theme to explore how virtue applies to the goals of higher education in essays such as ethical character development and personal and academic excellence in thinking through the concept of virtue and how it applies to consciousness education and the future dr lombardo emphasizes the one key virtue wisdom that provides the center of gravity around which all other character virtues revolve indeed if any one concept unites

the majority of essays in this collection it is wisdom in the wisdom of future consciousness the author argues that wisdom is the highest expression of future consciousness and systematically describes the numerous connections between wisdom and heightened future consciousness further according to the author wisdom is the key ideal that we should model and teach within education now and in the future this argue

We Are All Made of Star Stuff: A Cosmic Connection

The phrase "we are all made of star stuff" is more than a poetic sentiment; it's a scientifically accurate description of our origin. This statement highlights the profound connection between humanity and the cosmos, revealing that the very atoms that constitute our bodies were forged in the hearts of ancient stars billions of years ago. This article explores the scientific basis of this fascinating concept, tracing the journey of these stellar components from their creation to their current residence within us.

1. Stellar Nucleosynthesis: The Cosmic Forge

The building blocks of life – the elements – weren't created during the Big Bang. The Big Bang primarily produced hydrogen and helium, the lightest elements. Heavier elements, essential for the formation of planets, stars, and ultimately, life, were forged within stars through a process called stellar nucleosynthesis. This process involves nuclear fusion, where immense pressure and heat within a star's core force lighter atomic nuclei to fuse together, forming heavier ones. For example, four hydrogen nuclei fuse to create one helium nucleus, releasing a tremendous amount of energy in the process – the energy that powers the star. As stars age and evolve, they continue this process, creating progressively heavier elements. Smaller stars primarily produce elements up to carbon and oxygen. Larger stars, with their more intense internal conditions, are capable of synthesizing even heavier elements like silicon, iron, and beyond.

2. Supernovae: The Cosmic Distributors

When massive stars reach the end of their lives, they explode in spectacular events called supernovae. These cataclysmic explosions are incredibly energetic, dispersing the newly synthesized elements into the surrounding interstellar medium – the space between stars. This dispersed material becomes the raw material for the next generation of stars and planetary systems. Imagine a supernova as a cosmic recycling plant, breaking down old stars and distributing their enriched contents to create new ones. The heavy elements produced within these stars, such as iron, calcium, oxygen, carbon, and nitrogen – all crucial components of our bodies – are spread throughout space.

3. The Formation of Our Solar System and Earth

Our solar system, including the Sun and Earth, formed from a giant molecular cloud composed of gas and dust, enriched with the heavy elements dispersed by previous generations of stars. As this cloud collapsed under its own gravity, it formed a rotating disk, with the Sun igniting at the center. Within this rotating disk, dust and gas particles clumped together, gradually forming planetesimals – the building blocks of planets. Over millions of years, these planetesimals collided and accreted, eventually forming the planets, including Earth. Because the materials that formed Earth were enriched with the elements from previous supernovae, the Earth itself, and consequently everything on it, including us, is made of star stuff. The oxygen we breathe, the calcium in our bones, the iron in our blood – all originated within stars that died long before our solar system was even formed.

4. The Elements in Our Bodies: A Stellar Legacy

The elements produced in stars are not just scattered randomly. They are integrated into the intricate chemistry of life. Our bodies are primarily composed of oxygen, carbon, hydrogen, nitrogen, calcium, and phosphorus, all of which were forged in the hearts of stars. Even trace elements, vital for various bodily functions, have stellar origins. For instance, iron, crucial for transporting oxygen in our blood, is a product of stellar nucleosynthesis. This connection isn't metaphorical; it's a direct consequence of the physical processes governing the universe.

| 5. A Cosmic Perspective: Our Shared Heritage

The concept that we are all made of star stuff offers a profound perspective on our place in the universe. It underscores our interconnectedness not just with each other, but with the entire cosmos. We are literally stardust, a testament to the cyclical processes of creation and destruction that shape the universe. This perspective encourages a sense of awe and wonder, emphasizing our deep connection to the vastness and beauty of the cosmos. Understanding this cosmic heritage can foster a greater appreciation for the intricate workings of the universe and our place within it. Summary: The statement "we are all made of star stuff" is a scientifically supported fact. The elements that constitute our bodies were forged within stars through nuclear fusion, dispersed into space by supernovae, and eventually incorporated into the formation of our solar system and Earth. This highlights the profound connection between humanity and the universe, emphasizing the cyclical nature of cosmic processes and our shared stellar heritage. FAQs: 1. Are all elements in our bodies made in stars? Most of the elements heavier than hydrogen and helium in our bodies were created in stars. However, some elements, like hydrogen, were created during the Big Bang. 2. How long ago did the stars that created the elements in our bodies die? The stars that created the elements in our bodies likely died billions of years ago, before the formation of our solar system. 3. Can we trace the exact stars that contributed to our existence? No, it's currently impossible to trace the specific stars that contributed to the exact elements in our bodies. However, we can trace the overall processes of stellar nucleosynthesis and supernovae. 4. Is this concept only applicable to humans? No, this concept applies to all life on Earth and indeed, to most matter in the universe. We are all fundamentally connected to the cosmos through the elements that make us up. 5. What is the practical significance of knowing we are made of star stuff? While it doesn't have immediate practical applications like inventing new technologies, understanding our stellar origins provides a deeper appreciation for the universe, our place in it, and the interconnectedness of all things. This fosters scientific curiosity and inspires further exploration of the cosmos.
